London Version of the Treaty

1793-1794
The Treaty of Amity and Commerce

between the United States and Great Britain

The Treaty of Amity and Commerce, 1793-1794, was the first treaty between the United States and Great Britain. It was signed in London on September 11, 1794, and ratified by the United States on February 24, 1795. The treaty established friendly relations between the two nations and provided for the exchange of ambassadors.

It also provided for the exchange of consuls.

The treaty was a significant step in the development of American foreign policy. It established a precedent for the United States to negotiate treaties with other nations. The treaty also provided for the exchange of ambassadors, which was a new practice for the United States. The treaty was a result of the efforts of Thomas Jefferson, who was then Secretary of State, and John Jay, who was then Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. The treaty was a landmark in the history of the United States and Great Britain.
